

Transferable Skills

Don't think Performing Arts and Music only lead to careers in entertainment. They build up the very important transferable soft skills valued by companies across the world, including:

- professionalism
- communication
- teamwork
- empathy
- stress management
- confidence
- humility
- resilience

Raising Achievement

10 years ago, before we introduced our performing arts and music keys programme across the school, only 33% of our students gained A*-C grades. As we have become more professional and invested more time in the Arts, the results have hugely improved. Now 85% of our students gain A*-C grades, consistently. We are living proof of global research that says: "...study of the arts contributes to student achievement and success. Its multiple benefits are academic, basic and comprehensive." (Ruppert, S. 2006)

Success Stories

Our Alumni Leah Rozencwajg went on to study Music at Kings College, London and was given an award by the Queen (2021) at Buckingham Palace for her entrepreneurship and mentoring through the arts.

Lee Filikunjombe already has a huge following on social media and is becoming a popular and well celebrated artist in Tanzania.

Ray Seng'eng'e is the only professional classical violinist in Tanzania. He was the first student to be awarded a music scholarship at Braeburn and was later awarded a scholarship at Seattle University, USA to study string performance. He now motivates many of our students to practice the violin and other chosen instruments every day, in our special Music Keys Programme.
